They let it appear that their policy is based on respect of rereignty and territorial integrity, nonaggression, and the quest for peace all costs through the development of fruitful international cooperation.
8.	In the Korean problem, they claim the policy of the U.S. is to worsen the tension between the North and South and to keep the armistice settlement in a state of imbalance. It is obvious, they claim, that the U.S. is trying to widen the gap between the North and South and block the road leading to peace in Korea. In any event, they claim, the obstructiveness of the U.S. prevents the unification of Korea.

They say the U.S. should understand that the Formosa question is an internal affair and should be settled only by the Chinese themselves.
Propaganda and Radio
10.	There is an active propaganda campaign among the troops and in the schools. School children participate in propaganda parades wearing red ties and waving red flags and posters bearing the well known designs: hammer and sickle, the dove, etc. Pictures of MAO Tse-tung, CHOU En-lai and General NAM II are displayed everywhere. Posters depicting the North Korean soldier's "victory in his struggle for freedom" have been placed in many places where people usually gather. Other posters show statistics of economic and social development and encourage the people to unite for collective work.		yed
11.	Loud-speakers broadcast news in Korean, Russian, and Chinese. Music is also broadcast as part of the propaganda campaign, but the people show a complete indifference to this method and even consider it a racket. Although there are many broadcasts, no gatherings are ever observed, even among the troops 50X1-HUM
12.	U.S. broadcasts are almost continually garbled, especially on the 4-8 and 31 meters wavelengths. BBC broadcasts rarely encounter difficulty.
13.	13. Bookstores sell only Soviet and Korean books. No Chinese literature was found despite a search of the area.
